

Teaching Teens Good Money Habits

Before your teenagers start working or head off to college, put them on the road to financial literacy.

Do your teenagers know how to manage their money? Many young people are no longer starting out their adult lives in a traditional job with a pension. That's why it's critically important for them to form good money habits for saving, spending and investing. Here are six ways to instill good money skills in your teens for college and beyond—even if you, yourself, are still working on becoming more financially savvy.

1. Start early – When your kids are in elementary school, consider establishing an allowance for doing certain chores around the house. And to help children begin to learn the value of saving and compounding interest, set up savings accounts for them when they are in first grade. Although the small amount of interest they earn may not be that impressive, they will be getting in the habit of regularly depositing a portion of their birthday money and earnings.

2. Get them involved in household finances – Most teens are blissfully unaware of what it costs to keep the lights on, pay for cable TV, or take a week's vacation. Invite them to join you at the end of the month and view your checkbook entries—not only for paying for the items that benefit them directly, but for long-term obligations such as retirement contributions and mortgage payments.

3. Encourage financial responsibility – One of the best ways to hold teenagers accountable for their choices is to have them pay for such items as their mobile phone subscriptions or movie downloads. Budgeting lessons are also important—try giving them a back-to-school allowance and letting them buy their school supplies and clothes on their own. Even if they wind up buying a pair of trendy sneakers rather than enough socks or notebooks, the stakes are pretty low, and the consequences of their decisions

4. Allow them to learn money lessons by car shopping and buying – Before you buy a car for your teen for her 16th birthday, have her do the research online to compare prices, mileage, safety and projected repair costs. You might also assign your teen responsibility for calling various insurance agents to see what coverage will cost.

5. Limit their use of credit – Managing credit card debt is a serious problem for many consumers, but young cardholders may find it especially challenging. The use of prepaid cards in high school—available to those under age 18—can help establish good spending habits for your son or daughter, especially when taking a school trip or traveling on his or her own. Plus, parents can monitor what the kids are spending their money on.

6. Consider a teen retirement account – It seems increasingly likely that your kids will have to rely on their own savings and investments to help cover expenses when they retire. Although that day is a long time away, having time on their side to save and invest is a distinct advantage for young people. Once your teen gets his or her first real job, suggest setting aside a portion of earnings (say, 10% or 15%) in a Roth IRA. To make opening an account more compelling, offer to match a portion of your child’s contributions for some period of time.

A Roth IRA allows an account holder to contribute a portion of his paycheck after taxes. You can use the Roth IRA to teach your teen about the stock market, risk, and the importance of having a long time horizon to recover from periodic market setbacks.

The National Endowment for Financial Education has a wealth of resources, which can help educate your teen or college student, that can be downloaded for free at www.smartaboutmoney.org.

This material was created for educational and informational purposes only and is not intended as ERISA, tax, legal or investment advice. If you are seeking investment advice specific to your needs, such advice services must be obtained on your own separate from this educational material.

HUB Retirement and Private Wealth employees are Registered Representatives of and offer Securities and Advisory services through various Broker Dealers and Registered Investment Advisers, which may or may not be affiliated with HUB International. Insurance services are offered through HUB International, an affiliate. Consult your HUB representative for additional information about the provision of specific securities, investment advisory, and insurance services.

©2023 HUB International Limited. All rights reserved.

RPW-185-1022 (Exp. 10/24)

hubinternational.com

